

Summer in the city

By Tony Sauro

Record Staff Writer

May 16, 2008 6:00 AM

San Francisco is an ideal city for walking - if you avoid the steeper hills, of course.

Perhaps the best place to walk is along the Embarcadero, a beautifully re-imagined and restored boulevard that covers the pleasantly scenic route from Market Street north to Fisherman's Wharf along the city's eastern waterfront.

You also can stroll south - it takes 20 to 30 minutes - to AT&T Park, where a mantra of the San Francisco Giants, post-Barry Bonds, is: "Good seats available."

A central focus of the area is the renovated Ferry Building, with its distinctive clock tower.

It's also easy to take public transportation - BART from Dublin/Pleasanton and Muni from the Embarcadero BART station - saving on $4 per gallon gas and avoiding the hassle and high cost of parking.

Where to eat

There are 130 restaurants - from fashionable to fast food - located within a one-third mile radius of the Ferry Building. Two new restaurants (Waterbar and Epic Roasthouse) add some class on the Embarcadero.